

From Tarot Reader—to Bible Believer

Every October, store shelves fill with witches, ghosts, fortune telling kits, tarot cards, and other symbols of the occult. It's the most popular time of the year for witches and occultists. However, for one woman who made a living reading tarot cards, Halloween will be different this year.

Alexandra Ashcroft used to read tarot cards. She is now encouraging her followers to read the Bible, instead.

In a recent TikTok video, she surprised her nearly one million followers by announcing she was leaving behind the occult practice that had made her popular. Why? To everyone's astonishment, she says she has become a follower of Jesus Christ.

Ashcroft, who built a large audience through tarot readings and spiritual sessions, posted a farewell video explaining that her decision had been months in the making.

Good and Faithful Servants

Every Chick customer has a different way of getting the gospel into people's hands. Here are four testimonies we recently received.

Opportunities Everywhere

One customer told us he hands out tracts wherever he goes—to Walmart grocery delivery drivers, restaurant workers, gas station attendants, and others he meets throughout the day.

He found that a simple approach works best. For example, when offering A Love Story to women, he'll often ask, "Do you like a good love story?" When they answer yes, he replies, "This is the greatest love story ever on this earth."

He also found a use for business reply envelopes from insurance companies, credit card companies, and other businesses that usually get tossed. Instead of throwing them away, he tucks Chick tracts into the envelopes and mails them back.

He even selects tracts that match the recipients, sending Things to Come, The Last Generation, and The Beast to insurance companies, Back From the Dead to a crematory, and Big Spender to credit card companies. Bible Believers Stand Their Ground

A Washington middle school student has sued her school district after school officials restricted her religious speech and required her to attend an assembly that conflicted with her Christian beliefs.

The lawsuit, filed on behalf of a Sylvester Middle School student identified as J.H., says she regularly offered Christian gospel tracts to classmates during noninstructional times, such as lunch and breaks.

According to the complaint, she simply asked classmates if they would like a tract and did not continue if they declined.

The case centers on an encounter with a school administrator who told J.H. she could no longer distribute religious tracts at school. When J.H. asked why students could share other viewpoints, the administrator responded

Young Adults Are Asking Big Questions

According to a new Barna study involving 1,500 teenagers ages 13–18, today's young people feel like they are carrying adult-level stress before they even graduate high school. The study found that over 75% already worry about how they will make a living. An equal number feel like society is falling apart and they don't know whether their generation has a stable future.

Over 70% are wrestling with determining what is true or worth believing. The same percentage feels significant pressure to figure out who they really are. Over 65% question whether people genuinely care about them, and more than half wrestle with whether God is real.

Many respondents still hope for a meaningful future, but underneath that hope is instability, anxiety, confusion, and uncertainty. They're also highly skeptical of institutions as a whole, including church, and doubt whether such institutions have their best interest in mind.

These are the types of questions evangelist Stuart Knechtle encounters regularly while speaking with students on college campuses across America. Knechtle, who works alongside his father Cliffe Knechtle through the apologetics ministry Give Me An Answer, has built a large online following through campus question-and-answer sessions dealing with Christianity, truth, suffering, morality, identity, and faith.

Stuart Knechtle said anxiety itself is often pushing students to search for something solid.

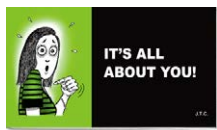

"The instability as well as the anxiety has pushed Gen Z to seek after something more," he said. "People look at anxiety and instability as a really bad thing, but I think, no, it wakes people up."

Doubt Is Not the Enemy

One of the more revealing findings from the Barna research is that teenagers do not want shallow answers. They are trying to make sense of life itself. They want to know what is true, why they are here, what makes a good life, and whether anyone can really be trusted.

Unfortunately, many churches have unintentionally taught young people that asking difficult questions is dangerous.

“This hasn’t been an overnight change,” she said. “This has been a gradual journey that has slowly changed the way that I see my life and my faith.”

Over the past year, she said she had spent time praying, asking questions, and seeking to understand where God was leading her. The more she grew in her faith, the more convinced she became that she could no longer continue producing tarot content.

“I am not going to be offering any more readings or sessions,” she told viewers. “I’m not going to be creating any more tarot content.”

She also announced that her existing TikTok account would be deleted.

“What I do know,” she said, “is that Jesus Christ has saved my life and I can no longer ignore that reality.”

Rather than trying to reinvent her old platform, Ashcroft started over. She launched a new TikTok account dedicated to sharing Scripture and talking about her walk with Christ.

Leaving the Old Life Behind

By the time her new account launched, nearly all of the videos that had made her popular were gone.

Instead of tarot readings, her first post opened by reading John 15:18: “If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.”

Ashcroft acknowledged that her decision had already generated criticism online.

“People have reached their own conclusions,” she said.

“That’s not in my control. I know the truth, God knows the truth.”

She also shared that thinking on Jesus’ that students could express opinions, “but not religious beliefs.”

The lawsuit also challenges a schoolwide inclusion assembly held in May that included presentations on racial diversity, disability, women’s rights, gender identity, sexual orientation, and LGBTQIA+ topics.

According to the lawsuit, one slide encouraged students to become allies by standing against what it described as “oppression” of LGBTQ people and that speaking against or “targeting any group” will not be allowed.

The complaint also says students’ parents were not notified in advance about the content of the assembly or given an opportunity to excuse their children from attending.

J.H. excused herself from the assembly and told staff she was uncomfortable returning. According to the lawsuit, a teacher told her, “You have no choice,” before directing her back inside, where she remained for the rest of the assembly in tears.

According to the lawsuit, the district later stated that students “may certainly distribute” religious materials during noninstructional times such as before and after school and during lunch. The district has also maintained that assemblies are voluntary and that students who choose not to attend may report to an alternative location. What J.H. experienced, however, speaks to the opposite.

Seminary Holds to Biblical Convictions

While one young Christian is standing firm in a public school, a well-known seminary has chosen to do the same despite significant consequences in the institutional realm.

For Top Scientist, “Seeing is Believing” No Longer Held Up

Michael Guillén seemed an unlikely candidate to become a Christian.

As a child growing up in East Los Angeles, he fell in love with science. By middle school, he was studying Einstein’s theory of relativity on his own. He later earned advanced degrees in physics, mathematics, and astronomy, taught physics at Harvard University, and became the Emmy Award-winning science editor for ABC News.

For years, he considered himself a committed atheist.

“Science was my god,” Guillén recently told The Christian Post.

Yet the deeper he explored the universe, the more convinced he became that reality was far more mysterious than he had once believed.

Mystery After Mystery

One of the first cracks in Guillén’s atheistic worldview came through Einstein’s theory of relativity, which challenged his simple belief that “seeing is believing.”

Later, while studying astrophysics at Cornell University, he encountered another mystery. Astronomers had discovered that galaxies were behaving as though they contained enormous amounts of unseen matter. Today, scientists refer to that invisible substance as dark matter, while dark energy and dark matter together are believed to make up about 95% of the universe.

For Guillén, that realization was profound.

“I realized I couldn’t live by this motto, ‘seeing is believing,’” he said. “It just doesn’t hold up to scrutiny.”

His search for answers expanded beyond physics. He explored several world religions before a fellow Cornell student named Laurel persuaded him to read the Bible. He admitted he initially death gave her a fresh appreciation for what He endured. “We can hear that story so many times,” she said, “that we actually forget the depth and the reality of that.”

As she reflected on Christ’s suffering, she encouraged others who may be facing ridicule because of their faith. “Any mockery you face right now,” she said, “Jesus faced it.”

A Better Answer

Occult practices may be especially visible during Halloween, but the spiritual hunger behind them exists all year long. Millions of people turn to tarot cards, astrology, psychic readings, crystals, and other New Age beliefs because they are searching for guidance, hope, and answers about the future.

Stories like Alexandra Ashcroft’s remind us that no one is beyond Christ’s reach. The same Saviour who rescued a woman immersed in tarot reading is still changing lives today.

Let’s use this Halloween season as an opportunity to lovingly point kids and adults away from spiritual counterfeits and toward Jesus Christ. Every gospel tract handed out, every conversation started, and every seed planted is an opportunity for someone who is searching to discover the truth that can truly set them free.

“ I was convicted reading [the tract] but I couldn’t get rid of it. Got saved less than 1 year later.” —B.W.

You never know which seed will sprout...

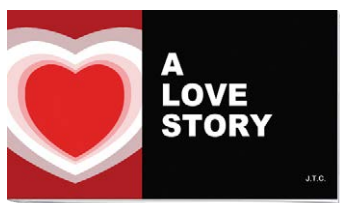

Jesus taught us to spread the good seed of the gospel into the field of the world, but we don’t know which seeds will sprout.

So, we sow, and we hope. Others may water. But God gives the increase.

Chick Publications still gets letters, emails, and phone calls from grateful people who found the Lord because someone was faithful to sow.

So let’s remain faithful, and creative. There are so many ways to share a tract. And if it’s a Chick tract, you know it’s going to get read.

Where will you sow today?

has to pay over a dollar to retrieve the postage-paid envelope.)

Still Going at 71

This testimony comes from Australia, where a man has spent decades getting tracts out through a website he designed, street preaching, and legal mailbox distribution. To date, he has personally distributed more than 1.5 million Chick tracts. Tens of thousands more have been distributed with the help of several assistants.

Now 71 years old, he averages about 1,000 mailboxes every week on foot. He intentionally revisits neighborhoods every 10 to 20 years, ensuring that new residents receive the gospel while previous recipients are given another opportunity to read it.

"It's good exercise," he wrote, "and a good feeling of the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ."

(Note: Placing tracts in mailboxes is legal in many countries but not in the U.S. Soulwinners in the States have found a workaround using zip sandwich bags with a few pebbles in with the tracts to make it easy to toss into driveways.)

A Unique Approach

Another customer found opportunities in places many people would overlook.

He regularly leaves Chick tracts on park benches throughout the Midwest, where he knows passersby pick them up and read them.

He also attends his town's yearly Oddities Festival, an event that showcases the bizarre. Rather than avoiding the crowd, he goes specifically to hand out Chick tracts. He rejoices in the opportunities: "I'm just so thrilled that God's word does not return to Him void by and through these Chick tracts!"

Cliffe Knechtle warned against that mindset.

"There are too many churches, I think, that still refuse to encourage people to ask questions," he said. "I think that's a big, big mistake."

Instead, he argued that doubt can actually become productive when it pushes someone to honestly search for answers. That matters, because young adults are desperately searching for stability, meaning, forgiveness, and truth in a culture that constantly shifts beneath them.

Many young adults are open to spiritual conversations. Barna's research found that more than two-thirds of teens say they are comfortable receiving wisdom from Jesus and the Bible. This openness presents an opportunity for Bible-believing Christians.

The Gospel Has Answers

Modern culture offers young people endless substitutes for truth. Social media tells them identity is self-created. Activists tell them morality changes with the times. Influencers tell them fulfillment comes through self-expression, relationships, success, or personal happiness. Yet despite all of those voices, young people remain anxious, lonely, and uncertain. It's almost as if they know what they are being fed is a lie.

The gospel speaks directly to the fears and confusion many young people carry today. The Bible explains who we are, why the world is broken, why suffering exists, and how sinners can be forgiven through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. That message has not lost its power. In fact, in a confused culture, clear biblical truth may stand out more than ever.

Decades of Faithfulness

A pastor from Mississippi shared that he first read a Chick tract, The Beast, as an eighth grader. Although he did not come to Christ until years later, he says tracts planted seeds that ultimately helped lead him to the Lord.

Today, after more than forty years in the ministry, he estimates that his church has distributed over 30,000 Chick tracts through direct mail, tract racks, door-to-door visitations, public events, and personal witnessing.

The ministry has also helped churches begin tract ministries, equipped Bible college students, and provided tracts for a youth outreach.

Asbury Theological Seminary was recently removed from a list of United Methodist Church (UMC) approved seminaries because the college's teachings no longer align with the denomination's revised positions on marriage, sexuality, and gender.

Asbury has been affiliated with the Methodist denomination since 1946, educating generations of future ministers. But after the denomination revised its Social Principles in 2024 to affirm same-sex marriage and embrace broader views of sexuality and gender, that long-standing relationship came to an end.

Rather than changing its position, Asbury reaffirmed its commitment to Scripture.

"Our theological commitments, including our commitment to Scripture, remain unchanged," said Asbury President Dr. David Watson. "We affirm marriage as sanctioned by God, which joins one man and one woman in a single, exclusive union for life." He also said the seminary continues to affirm that God created mankind as male and

His perspective on tract ministry was especially encouraging: "We KNOW God blesses it in ways we cannot see and that He is keeping score in eternity of the fruit it produces; therefore, by faith, we give His word, knowing it will not return void."

Every Opportunity Matters

We are all given unique opportunities to share the gospel. Whether it's handing a tract to a delivery driver, stocking a tract rack, or reaching a neighbor, every act of faithfulness matters. Thank you to each of you who faithfully put the gospel into people's hands. We look forward to hearing many more stories of how the Lord is using Chick tracts to reach people around the world.

Although the decision ends Asbury's official recognition by the United Methodist Church, the seminary has made clear it does not intend to change its position. While the overall impact is expected to be limited, the removal reflects the growing divide between churches and institutions that continue to uphold biblical teaching and those that have strayed away from Scripture.

Faithfulness Matters

These stories involve very different circumstances, but they reflect the same reality. Whether in a public school or a theological seminary, biblical convictions increasingly stand apart from the surrounding culture.

That makes opportunities to share the gospel more important than ever. Whether through a conversation with a friend, a classmate, a coworker, or by handing someone a Chick tract, we can continue pointing others to the unchanging truth of God's word and the hope found in Jesus Christ.

poised, put together, and self-confident on the outside. But beneath the surface, many are confused and asking serious questions. Often, all it takes is one faithful believer willing to start a conversation.

A gospel tract handed to a student, cashier, coworker, or neighbor may reach someone silently wrestling with questions they have never voiced aloud. A clear gospel message can cut through the confusion of social media, politics, and modern ideology with the truth of God's word.

Young people are searching for answers, and we have the greatest answer of all: Jesus Christ.

agreed mostly because he wanted to spend more time with her. Thirty-four years later, the two are still married.

While the Old Testament felt familiar from his studies of other religions, Guillén said reading the New Testament was a completely different experience.

"It was like curtains parting and birds chirping and the sun shining," he recalled.

His journey to faith wasn't immediate. He estimates it took another 20 years before he fully embraced Christianity.

Faith in the Scientific Community

Even after his beliefs began changing, Guillén found that openly discussing Christianity among elite scientists could come at a cost.

He recalled standing with fellow physicists as they discussed Nobel Prize winner Robert Millikan. One scientist dismissed Millikan's accomplishments with a cutting remark: "Too bad he was... a Christian."

The experience left a lasting impression. For years, Guillén admitted he largely kept quiet about his growing faith.

Today, however, he speaks openly on college campuses, where he says many students assume serious scientists cannot also be serious Christians. Rather than arguing, he encourages honest questions and respectful conversations.

"There has been nothing in the Bible I have read so far that contradicts anything I've learned, as a scientist, about the universe," he said.

The Greatest Questions

Scientist or not, people from all walks of life are searching for answers to the same questions: Why are we here? Is there more than what we can see? Does life have purpose?

As a scientist who spent decades at the highest levels of academia, Guillén encourages people around the world to ask those questions. In an age when many assume science and Christianity are at odds, he hopes his story offers a different perspective.

Guillén hopes to encourage others not to dismiss Christianity before examining it for themselves. After all, he spent years in the scientific community before concluding that the evidence of the universe and the message of the Bible are not in conflict.

For a man who once believed science could explain everything, the greatest discovery of his career wasn't found in a laboratory or through a telescope. It was finding the One who created the universe that he had spent his life trying to understand.

Many of the tracts will go home to countries that are very hard to get tracts into.

Zambia

In March of this year we shipped 70,000 Chick tracts to Missionary Mike Dobbins in the Copperbelt of Zambia. These tracts had to travel across country to a consolidator who loaded them into a container. They then travelled around the Horn of Africa to reach Zambia. Finally, the long-awaited Chick tracts have now been delivered to him in Chingola.

Letter From David W. Daniels

Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

I've been having so much fun getting out tracts! I hold up three or four and ask, "Which of these do you not have?" Often they will pick one and that's it. If someone declines, that's their decision. I go on.

Until this last week.

I held up four tracts to one person and he said, "I haven't seen any of them!" So I handed them all as a gift. He gladly received them!

But this is what got me: At another drive-through window, the young lady was shown two and said, "No, thank you."

But that wasn't the end. We were waiting for our order. I felt inside me, "Get JENNY." So I did. When she was handing us our food she said she'd changed her mind! I handed her JENNY, and she gladly took it!

When times are really good, people feel satisfied and may not be interested in hearing about eternity and a better life. But when times are iffy, like now when many teens don't believe they have a future, they become more interested in answers for their life's questions.

And that is why you and I are so important. In a few short seconds, we can hand them a gospel tract that could change the direction of their life and eternity. That's why my pockets stay stuffed with tracts and my car has backup.

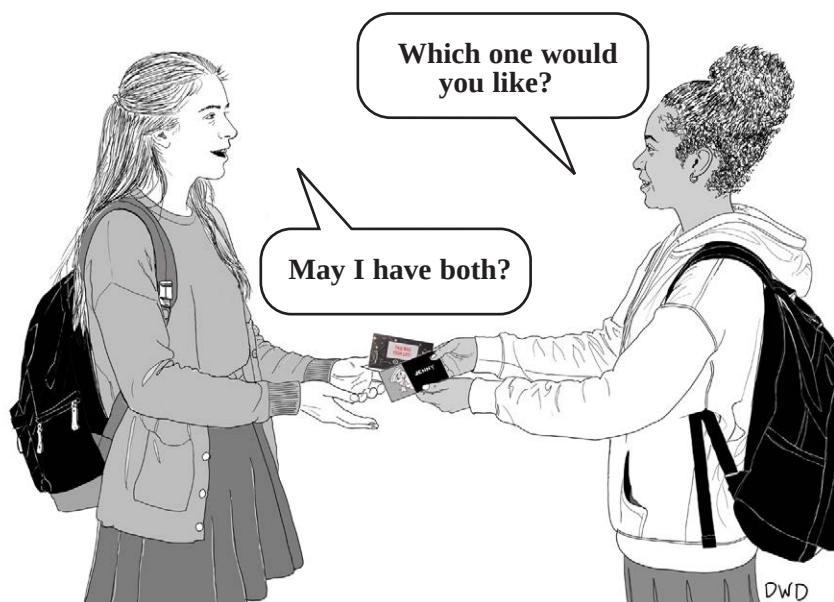

They say, "Be the change." We have the opportunity to bring about that change, and to arrange a meeting between that unsaved man or woman and God.

Happy tracting!

In Christ Jesus, and for His service,

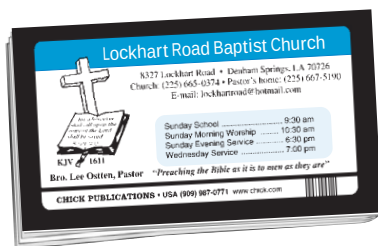

David Daniels
